Brendan’s life in the monastery at Kells is not very exciting—his uncle, Abbot Callach, won’t even allow him outside the walls. Then Aidan and his cat, Pugger Bán, arrive.

Suddenly life is one big adventure. In the Tower Brendan is rescued from wolves by Niall, a mysterious green-eyed girl. In the sea the Dark One, he stirs up the sea to steal the eye of the wondrous god, Caorl-Cruach.

And all the while Aidan is keeping a secret— a secret that will become Brendan’s biggest challenge.

Meanwhile the Vikings are coming closer and closer...

"Medical students experience transformative personal and professional changes during medical school. The medical education community has much to learn about how students perceive these changes, which can be dramatic and profound. /.../ A foundational goal of medical education is to facilitate the transformation of students from lay people to physicians."

Every death you are a part of will remind you of every death you were ever a part of. It’s all there. What matters is who you become as a result of that.

Why didn’t they teach us any of this in nursing school?

It’s tough stuff to teach. Everyone’s needs are so different. You have to learn how to live into self-care and other-care.

How are you dealing with your grief?

Painting, mostly.

Why Graphic Medicine in the library?

• Research into comics and medicine is minimal.
• What does exist can be difficult to find.
• Collections are lacking in medical comics.
• How are we helping patrons find and use them?
